ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many local corrections practitioners contributed to the successful curriculum revision project of 1999-2000. The agencies they represent reflect the demographic diversity of California's local detention systems. Additionally, training providers, instructors and other subject matter experts gave valuable input during the revision process.

The Board of Corrections is extremely grateful to all those who volunteered their time and hard work in making this revision process successful. Their support and assistance, along with their agencies' generous contribution of their time, enables California to maintain the most comprehensive and current training program for entry-level adult corrections officers. The Board of Corrections wishes to thank the following individuals who participated in this project:

Introduction

Knowledge and Skill Maps are used to generate information to link the core tasks to the curriculum and to design training. Instructors and course planners will find the maps especially helpful for developing lesson plans and formulating test questions.

The maps were created by asking practitioners and subject matter experts to address the following questions about each core task or group of related core tasks:

- 1. What is the value of this task or group of tasks? What are the consequences of effective or ineffective performance?
- 2. What knowledge, skills and abilities (KSA's) must the performer bring to the task or group of tasks? That is, what are the prerequisite KSA's?
- 3. What rules, concepts or principles are used by those who do this task or group of tasks particularly well?
- 4. What are the subtasks or steps that underlie this core task or group of tasks? Is there a definite sequence in which these subtasks or steps are performed?
- 5. What resources or aids are available to the performer as he/she performs this task or group of tasks?

Each map consists of all the knowledge and skills – generated by asking the questions listed above – necessary for successful performance of a given core task. Each question surfaces a different type of capability which, if lacking, could result in poor performance. To the extent that trainees are not expected to have such knowledge or skills when hired, these capabilities represent training needs. Thus, the instructional objectives are generated from the maps.

This "mapping" process was used in workshops with practitioners and subject matter experts during the development of the original adult corrections officer core course of 1987, and again during the curriculum revision projects of 1989-90, 1993-94 and 1999-2000. This input from practitioners and subject matter experts ensures the currency and validity of the curriculum for the benefit of local corrections employees and employers.

The manual contains 71 maps categorized into 11 general topical headings. These headings roughly correlate with the course outline. The maps address 187 out of the 196 core tasks identified in the 1999-2000 job analysis. The nine core tasks not covered in the maps are excluded for one of two reasons:

- 1. The tasks are so general they apply to numerous aspects of the adult corrections officer job. For instance, task # 59: Fill out facility forms (any type of form used in the facility); or,
- 2. The ability to perform the task is not appropriate for core curriculum and is screened for in other steps of the selection process. For instance, task # 180: Read daily journal/log, relates to the ability to read. Reading ability can be more readily evaluated by a candidate's performance on the written selection examination.

Some maps address one task; other maps address several related tasks. In addition, there are a few maps that address the same, singular task. This is because the tasks may be viewed from different perspectives, such as searching inmates at booking versus searching inmates as part of routine supervision of inmates on the housing unit. An example is task # 79: Pat-search inmates. Maps 1.01 and Map 5.05 both address this task but from differing viewpoints of intake and supervision respectively. Because of this overlap, it is important for course coordinators who oversee the entire delivery process to review all lesson plans and test questions that emanate from these maps to avoid unwanted redundancy.

The notation "AS" on some of the maps stands for "Agency Specific." This means the step or rule relating to the task or group of tasks may vary from agency to agency throughout the state. For instance, certain policies regarding when to use the safety cell may differ among agencies. Therefore, instructors are encouraged to develop their lesson plans in accordance with existing policy (if known) for the audience to whom they are delivering instruction.

Two indexes are included in this manual. The first index links training related core tasks to the knowledge skill maps. The second index links the instructional objectives to the maps.

The instructional objective to map index shows the link from information on the map to instructional objectives. Since the instructional objectives were developed from various parts of the maps (value, prerequisites, steps, concepts), several instructional objectives may have emanated from one map. Also, the same instructional objective may contain information from two different maps depending on the scope of the instructional objective.

Despite the fact that this curriculum design is heavily based on empirical research, a rational approach was also employed in the construction of these indices. This was necessary based on the interrelated nature of the tasks, maps and instructional objectives. Notwithstanding this aspect of the indices, the maps provide an overall perspective and way to "jog" the instructor's thinking for lesson plan and test question development. Because the tasks, maps and instructional objectives interrelate and overlap, it is important for the:

- Course coordinator to review with each instructor the lesson plans and test questions to avoid unintended redundancy; and,
- Instructors to interpret the maps according to the section of the course they are teaching and to extract only those aspects of the maps that pertain to their assigned objectives.

How to Use This Manual: An Example

Suppose you are an instructor asked by the core course coordinator to teach Module 13.2: Supervising Meals. When developing the lesson plan and test questions for that module, you want to know more information about instructional objective 13.2.1: Identify steps for maintaining control when inmates are released for meals.

One avenue of research in preparing your lesson plan is to look at which core tasks are related to this objective. To do so, consult the Instructional Objective to Core Task Index located in the Core Training Course Manual. You will find that the objective 13.2.1 relates to the following core tasks:

- 92. Feed/supervise inmate meals in cells or dormitories, verifying tray and/or utensil counts.
- 93. Release inmates for meals.
- 94. Supervise inmate meals in dining hall, cafeteria, housing area or food service area, monitor and maintain control, and verify tray and utensil counts.
- 42. Give instructions/directions orally to groups of inmates.

Another way to get more information is to look at how these tasks are described in the knowledge/skill maps. To find where these tasks are analyzed in the maps, consult the Core Task to Maps Index. You will find that tasks 92, 93, 94 and 42 are analyzed on Map 6.05 (Supervising Inmate Meals). You also see that task 42 is found on Maps 6.06 and 6.07 along with other tasks.

An alternative way to access more information is by consulting the instructional objective to map index. On that index you find that instructional objective 13.2.1 shows the link to map 6.05.

In reviewing the information on these three maps, you see on Map 6.05 that a rule or concept associated with supervising meals is the ability to manage large groups of inmates at one time. You might decide to include in the lesson plan a discussion on techniques to direct groups of inmates. You might incorporate a practice session in the classroom giving trainees an opportunity to direct classmates in a simulated large group process. You may also use examples of when things go wrong during meal supervision as part of your lecture and use some of the examples to formulate questions on the Job Knowledge Test for that objective.

The information about task # 42 Give instructions/directions orally to groups of inmates is also found on Map 6.06. However, that map is geared more toward supervising inmates during recreation versus meals. Information on Map 6.06 includes considerations about staff-to-inmate ratio when supervising large groups. That information could be incorporated into your lesson plan as well.

In reviewing Map 6.07 Monitoring Inmate Activity you see task # 42 appears again but the thrust of that map is toward establishing inmate informants and is less linked to supervising meals. Therefore, the information on that map is not as directly on point for use in lesson plan development for Supervising Meals.

All three maps contain information related to tasks other than the four noted in the core task to instructional objective index for 13.2.1. It is not intended for instructors to incorporate all the information from the maps into each lesson plan. This would result in a lot of pointless repetition in the presentations. Therefore, when reviewing the maps, it is important to keep in mind the perspective of the particular instructional objective being addressed for each part of the lesson plan.

The above example illustrates ways to use the maps. It does not illustrate a comprehensive treatment of the entire instructional objective 13.2.1, but rather, gives a sample of how one might go about constructing part of the lesson plan for that module.

Even without going through the index of linkages, a straight "read through" of the entire maps manual should enhance a core instructor's understanding of the instructional intent as they develop their presentation.
